Students should read the feedback given for the essay and carefully read this new resit Essay Brief. A positive way to tackle the brief is to analyse and understand the question which is being asked .. what are you required to do. Look for the active words.

Top Tips ... before you start

- Make an appointment with the Centre for Academic Writing
- Find a copy of one of the Palgrave Macmillan Study Skill series on Essay Writing
- Print a copy of the CU Harvard Referencing Style
- Ask for help from the librarians for research material
- Make a plan of work identifying all the
- Carry out the Good Academic Conduct Quiz if you have not already done so – see the AHH009 Course web on Moodle for the link
- Read the Assessment Criteria to help plan how you approach the essay

Review the period of study from your original essay and identify the reading which you need to do

Select three important buildings which you consider to be representative of the period. The examples should be selected from the course text 'A History of Western Architecture' by David Watkins and should be different from those which you originally selected.

Carry out a drawn diagrammatic analysis to identify the architectural characteristics of your period of study. The diagrams will be systematic and efficient, breaking down the architectural language into constituent parts. This analysis will be informed by your research and reading.

Making reference to your analysis, discuss the Mockabee quotation and identify how the three examples you have selected show the culture of the society in which they were created.

“ the best way to make real architecture is by letting a building evolve out of the culture and place”
Samuel Mockbee (1944 – 2001) founder of Rural Studio

The conclusion is an important part of the essay. This should summarise your findings, and identify how the culture of the society you have studied can influence how architectural projects are created in today's 21st Century society.

The conclusion should also include a short paragraph of reflective writing which identifies how you intend to approach future written assignments in your studies.
