

As we got out the train station- bowling green in lower Manhattan I seen a lot of tourists and bike riders. There was also a lot of outside space, seats for people to sit and relax. (Include the history of lower manhattan bowling green, be sure to state that you googled and found out ....) Theres many foreigners that come and explore lower Manhattan . I heard some people speaking french as they were walking past me. I also heard people speaking other languages but i just wasn't sure what language they were speaking. We walked through the park of lower manhattan and were watching the river, the east river. (Talk about the history of the east river, and also explain why the bridge is called verrazano bridge). Things have changed, before, this area was nothing but ships. Talk about what wall street was. Talk about the citi bank on bowling green/ manhattan broadway new york, that building where the bank is was a place where they would drop off passengers, the front of the building still says "first class" which is right under the word "citi bank". Talk about how the buildings in lower manhattan was built in the 1800s. And end on a good note.....
