

someone other than some kind of magic ~~or miracle~~. By the end of the play, she gains a lot of respect when she stands up for herself by leaving Torvald like a strong woman, but it was very weak of her to leave her children ^{rather than} ~~and~~ take them along with her.

→ At the end of the play, we see that Nora is staying with her family and, at the same time, reconciling with Torvald. ^{that} Therefore, I do not feel like the story has a proper ending. Going through the characters of both Nora and Torvald, I can't seem to understand their reconciling, because they both ^{are} ~~are~~ ^{too} ~~very~~ stubborn in their own ways to accept their part ⁱⁿ of the mistakes and ^{fail to} ~~wouldn't actually~~ make any effort ~~themselves~~ to fix things. I think if she goes back to her husband and is ready to be treated like she was treated before, then she'll lose the respect she gained by taking a stand for herself. As Nora makes it clear that there is nothing that can fix their relationship ~~now~~. If the ending ^{changes} ~~is together is perfect~~ ^{changed to a forced reconciling} and they ~~getting back together~~, all the emotions and power from ^{the original ending} ~~this line will~~ vanish and its meaning would be lost.

→ I completely agree that Ibsen had human rights in his mind, ^{as women deserve those} ~~because the point to be noted~~ ^{same rights and are often overlooked in the discussion of human rights.} ~~here is that human rights are also female rights as females are also humans.~~ The story ~~was~~ successful ^{by} ~~to~~ convey the sexist actions ^{of} ~~through~~ Torvald, and people can easily examine them. People can feel the pain of what Nora is going through by being treated like an emotionless doll. ^{You've said this. Give an example.} (We see how this treatment affects Nora and how she develops as the story goes on.) At the beginning she seems so naïve and is happy with Torvald loving her for just her beauty, ~~and she's content with everything~~ however, at the end, she realizes that an actual relationship needs more than beauty and being loved only for ^{her looks} ~~beauty~~ wasn't something she needed.
